Mercredi 24 mai : Ines Stolpe (Institut für Orient- und Asienwissenschaften, Universität Bonn) : « Homeland matters: potentials and dilemmas of nutag councils in post-socialist Mongolia » EN ANGLAIS

Résumé :

Today, more than half of Mongolia's population resides in cities, and a large number of citizens live abroad. Nutag councils (nutgiin zövlöl) are multilocal networks that connect rural and urban spheres within and beyond national borders. Initially established after socialism as an answer to the sudden disintegration of the public infrastructure, they have become the most widespread yet – for outsiders – the least visible feature of the civil society landscape. From the 1990s, the provision of public services became largely unpredictable and the institutional void certainly did not meet the horizons of legitimate expectations for futures imagined in rural areas. When the countryside (khödü) is considered a reservoir of cultural authenticity, it is often overlooked that prevailing notions of intactness include aspects of modern life that originated under socialism. This applies in particular to rural district centres (sum), which are primary foci of nutag councils. Their manifold activities provide key insights into distinctive structures of relevance, knowledge cultures and (socio-)logics of practice which are characteristic of modern Mongolia.

Expositions photographiques

14 avril-26 mai 2023 : Gestes habiles du quotidien

Du 14 avril au 26 mai à l'Humathèque, Campus Condorcet (Aubervilliers) : Exposition photographique : Gestes habiles du quotidien : les savoirs-faire des peuples sibériens. Cette exposition, organisée par Anne Dalles-Maréchal et Clément Jacquemoud, est proposée par la Société des Études Mongoles et Sibériennes.

Les sociétés sibériennes sont très diversifiées. Elles sont composées d'anciens groupes de chasseurs cueilleurs et/ou d'éleveurs nomades et transhumants réparties sur un territoire grand comme à peu près 26 fois la France. Jusqu'à la période soviétique, le mode de subsistance de ces communautés dépendait fortement du milieu environnant. La connaissance fine de ce milieu permettait l'exploitation des ressources brutes et leur transformation en produits manufacturés (artisanaux), mais elle conditionnait également l'organisation sociale et les représentations. Dans une perspective identitaire, les sociétés autochtones sibériennes contemporaines remettent à jour certains des savoir-faire qu'elles considèrent comme "traditionnels".

Interroger ces savoir-faire revient à questionner non seulement les connaissances, actions et techniques mobilisées dans les productions matérielles, mais également leur transmission, ainsi que les modes de vie, les rapports entre l'humain et son environnement, entre l'humain et la matière, les rapports sociaux, et les visions du monde. La question de savoir pourquoi, dans un contexte postsoviétique, ces savoir-faire-là sont réactualisés plutôt que d'autres, est aussi très importante. En d'autres termes, qu'est-ce que les savoir-faire peuvent nous apprendre des sociétés qui les mobilisent ?

Dans le but de répondre à cette interrogation, les photographies présentées montrent quelques-uns des savoir-faire des sociétés autochtones sibériennes. Avec la volonté de donner à voir et à comprendre, cette exposition vise donc à mettre en avant les sociétés autochtones sibériennes, leurs connaissances et techniques du corps comme savoir-faire, les discours qui les accompagnent et permettent leur transmission, mais aussi le travail de recueil de données effectué par les anthropologues du CEMS.
