4-5 avril 2025: Conference “Caring for the Dead”

Faculty CONFERENCE convened by Professors Jonathan BRACK, Sean HANRETTA, and Akin OGUNDIRAN on “Caring for the Dead: Ancestor Veneration, Religious Encounters, and the State in the Mongol Empire and Africa”—Friday and Saturday, April 4-5, 2025.

Description of the workshop:

This unique workshop seeks to explore the merits of a comparative approach to the historical and archeological study of elite practices concerning the dead and their remains in the medieval African and Mongol imperial contexts, and consider their modern and contemporary resonances. In both cases, the veneration of the dead of key ancestral lines was central to the reproduction and reaffirmation of social cohesion, political power, and the accumulation of material wealth and social resources. The workshop will bring into conversation archeologists, bioarcheologists, historians, art historians, and religious studies experts, who broadly study burial practices, ancestor veneration, religious afterlives, and political formations in Africa and within Mongol Eurasia. While the workshop focuses on Africa and Mongol Eurasia during the period identified as “late medieval,” we are also interested in expanding our temporal perspective and considering ancestor worship, rituals, and the state during the 19th and 20th centuries in both Mongolia and Africa.

Programme : <https://historicalstudies.northwestern.edu/events/conferences/Conference%201.html>

All currently living forms of local history-related oral tradition among the pastoral communities of Mongolia are non-professional in the sense that traditional society did not create targeted supporting activities to assist the transmission and learning of narratives of oral tradition within family or broader community life. The oral transmission of historical memory has been attributed to Inner Asian pastoralist societies based on analogies with other geographical regions, but this assumption has yet to be systematically verified. On the contrary, Mongolian pastoralist society is unique in creating its own written documentation, even as the local archives of many areas have been completely or partially lost.

Collectively speaking, the oral memory of Western Mongolia preserves a unique historical experience of sustenance and resilience in this mountainous, semi-arid steppe and semi-desert region — dominated by, but not limited to mobile pastoralism. These memories are at urgent risk of falling into oblivion. The current moment is indeed the last opportunity to record the complex oral tradition of selected communities and to describe its structure, internal processes of transmission, and current changes. These Inner Asian mobile pastoralists are facing far-reaching economic, social, and environmental changes, leading to intensive movement of people and information within hitherto geographically and administratively closed rural communities.

Based on this challenge and our ten year-long field research experience in Western Mongolia, in 2023 the Institute of Mongolian, Korean and Vietnamese Studies, Faculty of Arts, Masaryk University launched a five-year project “Changing Adaptive Strategies of Mobile Pastoralists in Mongolia: Dynamics in Community Histories and Movement Patterns Documented Through Oral Sources” (Czech Science Foundation, GM23-07108M), thanks to which a team of experts has been formed to study the adaptation strategies of mobile herders, mainly through the herders’ own oral memories. This project runs in synergy with the project “Evolutionary interferences of religion and governance in Inner Asia: Comparison of mutual impacts with tributary countries: Mongolia, Korea, Vietnam” led by Michal Schwarz, Ph.D. (Czech Science Foundation, GA23-06953S, 2023-2025).

The main objectives of the “Changing Adaptive Strategies of Mobile Pastoralists” project are:

1. To specify methods of gaining complex knowledge of currently living forms of localized, non-professional history-related oral tradition among Inner Asian mobile pastoralist communities.
2. To posit this oral tradition as a dynamic and living phenomenon — despite external endangerment and tendencies toward unification — and to propose non-invasive means of supporting the preservation of this living oral legacy.
3. To attain a better understanding of how local oral traditions relate to the formulation of identities of individual groups, their ties to certain territories, and their relations to larger political and national entities.
4. To verify the hypothesis that through the detailed systematic recording and visualizing of seasonal movements of mobile pastoralists, beginning from a micro-local level through orally remembered segments of the past, hitherto inaccessible chronological evidence of changes (or, in some cases, stability) in land use by mobile pastoralists can be attained. This evidence can serve as a key source for investigations concerning factors contributing to the current degradation of pastures.

The present conference will address issues of local history-related oral tradition as a hitherto neglected and hardly determinable, yet highly significant and frangible category of intangible cultural heritage. Our team members would like to present the current results of our attempts to describe the emic understanding of the concept of history by local communities, to define patterns in the transmission process of local oral tradition in Western Mongolia in the past, and finally, to assess its current state.

In our understanding, the concepts of oral history and oral tradition are separate yet closely interrelated and intertwined, requiring a parallel knowledge of accessible archive (and other forms of written) sources. We eagerly welcome researchers dealing with issues related to the local history of any region of Inner Asia, relations of local identities and landscape, sacred geography, oral cartography, microhistories, and genealogy to present their methodological approaches to the collection, sorting, processing and practical use of their materials from oral and archive sources.

We look forward to welcoming you in Brno.

Yours sincerely

Ondřej Srba and Michal Schwarz

8-9 avril 2025 : Fifth International Conference on Aspects of Mongolian Buddhism

We kindly invite you to the Fifth International Conference on Aspects of Mongolian Buddhism held on 8-9 April 2025: Textual Tradition of Mongolian Buddhism: Written and Oral Traditions

Organizers

- Department of Mongolian and Inner Asian Studies, ELTE Eötvös Loránd University
- Research Centre for Mongolian Studies, ELTE Eötvös Loránd University

In collaboration with partner institutions from Hungary and Mongolia.

Please register by 7 January 2025 by sending your name, affiliation, title and abstract in 150 words to mongol@btk.elte.hu. If you need an invitation letter for the visa, please let us know.

In 2025, we celebrate the 90th anniversary of Professor György Kara's birth (1935–2022) and the 75th anniversary of the establishment of Hungarian-Mongolian diplomatic relations. We wish to contribute to these events by organizing the Fifth International Conference on Aspects of Mongolian Buddhism on 8–9 April 2025. The conference is organized by the Department of Mongolian and Inner Asian Studies and Research Centre for Mongolian Studies, ELTE Eötvös Loránd University with partner institutions from Hungary and Mongolia.

Following the success of the conferences “Mongolian Buddhism: Past, Present and Future” in 2015, “Mongolian Buddhism in Practice” in 2017, “Mongolian Buddhism: Tradition and Innovation” in 2019, “Mongolian Buddhism: Animals, Plants and Bioethics” in 2022, the fifth international conference is for scholars and monks to present their work on any aspect of the textual tradition of Mongolian Buddhism. This can cover history, philosophy, education, monasticism, rituals, folklore and folk religion, and any other fields related to Mongolian Buddhism's textual tradition preserved in written form or oral narratives.

The tradition of Mongolian Buddhism traces back centuries, and Buddhist teachings and practices exist in both written and oral forms. The aim of the conference is to reveal the wide diversity of Mongolian Buddhism's textual tradition. The conference will focus on the Buddhism of Mongols living in the present area of Mongolia and the beliefs and practices of Mongols living in China, Russia, or other places where Mongols settled. The distinctiveness of Mongolian Buddhism compared to the Buddhist corpus in general will be revealed through the presentations. The scientific papers will be published in book format.

Renowned Hungarian Orientalist, Mongolist and philologist, Professor György Kara (1935–2022), corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, head of the Department of Inner Asian Studies at ELTE Eötvös Loránd University and the Research Group for Altaic Studies of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences for decades, was a pioneer in the research of the “Books of the Mongolian Nomads” and laid an emphasis on different scripts, eminent polymaths, and philological research of Mongolian texts. Presentations concerning Professor György Kara's oeuvre, research topics, and philology are also warmly welcome.

The main languages of the conference are English, Mongolian and Russian.

The organizers will provide refreshments during the conference. Travelling and accommodation should be organized individually. If you need assistance regarding accommodation possibilities, please ask the organizers.

An escorted visit to the Oriental Collection of the Library and Information Centre of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences would be organized in the afternoon on 7 April 2025. The first day of the conference, 8 April 2025 will take place at ELTE Eötvös Loránd University, and Károli Gáspár University of the Reformed Church in Hungary will host the panels of the second day, 9 April 2025.

Please note that the conference "Community Histories, Environment and Mobile Pastoralism in Inner Asia" will take place at Masaryk University, Brno, Czechia on 4–5 April 2025.

We are looking forward to seeing you in Budapest at Eötvös Loránd University.

On behalf of the organizing committee:

Ágnes Birtalan, head of the department and the research centre

18-22 juillet : International Symposium on National Philology and Classics

Letter of Invitation (No. 1)

January 6, 2025

Dear Esteemed Colleague,

We pleased to invite you to the International Symposium on National Philology and Classics, to be held from July 18 to 22, 2025, in Hohhot, Inner Mongolia, China. The event is jointly organized by Institute of Advanced Study in National Philology and Classics at Inner Mongolia University and the Institute of Historical and Philological Studies of Western Regions at Renmin University of China.

As a unified multi-ethnic country, China embodies a diverse yet cohesive civilizational community. "National Philology" represents a vital area of research within China Studies, grounded in both a multi-faceted national identity and an understanding of the Chinese nation. This field utilizes a variety of languages and classic texts from China's ethnic groups, employing multi-ethnic literature as its primary research methodology to explore the historical, linguistic, cultural, religious, and philosophical aspects of various classical civilizations. It aims to elucidate the origins, development, forms, and systems of Chinese civilization as a whole, contributing to the construction of modern Chinese national identity. The symposium will cover a range of topics, including but not limited to: 1) Theories, methodologies, and approaches of national philology; 2) Philological research on multilingual literature; 3) Eurasian philology and mutual learning among civilizations. In recognition of your outstanding contributions to the field of Chinese philology and classical studies, we cordially invite you to attend this academic conference and share your insights.

There will be no registration fee for this conference. The hosting organization will cover accommodation and academic excursion expenses, while participants are kindly requested to manage their own travel costs. Should you require financial assistance for travel, please feel free to apply to the organizing committee. A formal invitation letter will be issued upon receipt of your RSVP. For further inquiries, please contact us:

April 15, 2025 — notification of acceptance / rejection of abstracts

September 7-11, 2025 — the Conference.

The following issues are expected to be discussed:

- Language contact of Mongolic in synchronic and diachronic perspectives;
- Contact-induced language change in the history of Mongolic;
- General trends and specific developments in historical and modern Mongolic varieties;
- Recent advances in Mongolic etymological studies;
- Sociolinguistic situations in Mongolic-speaking areas;
- Genetic and areal features of the Mongolic languages and dialects;
- Typology of Mongolic phonological, grammatical and lexical systems;
- Contemporary methods and approaches to the study of the Mongolic languages;
- Problems of classification and historical periodization of Mongolic languages and dialects;
- Principles and methods of modern Mongolic dialectological studies.

This list of possible topics is by no means exhaustive or directive, it just provides the framework of the Conference.

The working languages at the Conference will be English, Mongolian, and Russian.

There is no conference fee. Unfortunately, the Organizing Committee lacks funding to cover travel expenses and accommodation.

If you are interested to participate please submit your application by March 15, 2025. Applications should be submitted by filling in the form below. We are planning to have published Conference Proceedings with full-length papers after the Conference. The deadline and guidelines for submission of papers will be specified in the next circulars We will inform you whether your paper is selected by the Organizing Committee before April 15, 2025.

The ML 2025 will be held as an in-person event, but online participation will also be acceptable; if you prefer to make an online presentation, please specify it in the application form below.

Please forward this circular to those of your colleagues who are involved in studying of related topics and who might be interested to participate. E-mail address: monglang2025@gmail.com, please indicate the topic of your message as follows: "To the Organizing Committee".
